

Part A

Why walking matters

As outlined in Part A of Easy Steps, walking is important to many stakeholders including federal, state and local governments, society in general, the business community and individuals.

Part A also highlights key benefits that increased walking can provide to a community, including health, social, environmental, transport, tourism and economic benefits. This information can assist council planners in building a case for the development of a walking program in their area.

